Dear Reader:

Saving money is, to a large extent, knowing how to spend it wisely.

Sometimes it's as simple as buying summer clothes in September ... or keeping a small night-light on to prevent dangerous and costly accidents.

Other times, though, it can get pretty involved. For instance, computing true interest rates ... understanding the difference between straight life and term insurance ... or knowing how to treat your lawn.

The risks -- and opportunities -- in money management these days are so great that families really need a financial consultant to advise, warn, and encourage them. But no one is an expert in everything, and the cost of hiring a staff of them is self-defeating. That is, it's self-defeating to all but those who subscribe to ...

CHANGING TIMES

In our Kiplinger offices here in Washington we maintain an extensive staff of tough, hard-nosed, practical experts who have the happy knack of making the involved simple, and the complicated clear.

They are determined to come up with the best money ideas, suggestions, and counsel possible for the man or woman who pays their salaries -- the CHANGING TIMES subscriber.

And this is your opportunity to be their employer on a trial basis,
and pay them just a pittance in proportion to their worth.
